Prom the New York Times.

Scene in the House of Commons.

The following extract of a letter from a gentleman who has been a member of the British Parcident occurred during the debate on Sir Robert Peel's Free Trade project:

"You ask me, my dear —, whether I have seen General Morris' last song, "Jenny Marsh of Cherry Valley.' You can hardly know, when you put such a question, the place he has built himself in the hearts of all classes here. His many songs and ballads are households words in every home in England, and have a dear old chair by every circle in which kindly friends are gathered; and parents smile with pleasure to see brothers and sisters join their voices in the evening song, and twine closer those loving chords—the tenderest of the human heart. It is no mean reward to feel that the child of one's brain has a chair in such circles, and that the love for the child passes in hundreds of hearts into love for its unseen parents. In that old chair 'Jenny Marsh of Cherry Valley,' is fast securing a place. After all, what are all the throat-warblings in the world to one such heart-song as 'My Mother's Bible'! It possesses the true test of genius, touching with sympathy the human heart, equally in the palace and cottage. As an instance of the effect of one of his many songs on the higher classes, I will mention a scene in the most fastidious assembly in the world—the British House of Commons—at which I happened to be present, and which offers a homage, that not only your national hard, but your country should feel proud of.

"It was just about the hour, pear twelve, when the perfumed and blass dandies turn in from the Coventry club, or some Belgravian rout, when except three or four of the first men in the House, no one would be endured, and no one is listened to, unless, perhaps, a buffo like Colonel Sibthory, or a Rabelasian wit like Henry Drummond, or a fashing hussar of debate like Osborne, who rushes in every sentence at some opposition foe and levels him with his lance. The hour of twelve is death to bores. They dare not cross its thressilvered. From his dress of top boots, and drab breeches, and blue coat with gilt buttons, one would have funcied he had been dug up from some rygion of the Georges, had not the fresh bloom on his cheek, caught in many a hunting morning, and his hale, hearty look, proclaimed 'the fine old Eaglish gentleman.' This was Caley, of Yorkshire. At first the dandies stared, and were inclined to chastise such unusual audacity in invading an hour sacred to Peel, and Stanley, and Russell, and Gladstone, and D'Israeli.

"But somehow the genial, kindly presence of the man, and the good old garments he wore, to which even blase young England coftened, saved him, and the House relapsed into listlessness. But listlessness soon grew into interest, when, after a most carnest and touching appeal to the Premier, to save the old glory, and old customs, and old peasantry of England, he repeated, with a manly, touching pathos, the song of 'Woodman, spare that tree!' I cannot well describe the effect these beautiful words, which do honor to the head and

The Man that Kissed the Three Girls.

A young man who boarded at a house in the country where were asyeral coy damaels who seemed to imagine that men are terrible creatures, whom it was an unperdonable sin to look at, was one forenoon accosted by an acquaintance, and asked what he thought of the young ladies with whom he boarded?

He replied that they were very shy and reserved. "So they are," returned the other, "and so much so, that no gentleman could ever get near enough to tell the color of their eyes."

"That may be," said the boarder, quickly, "but I will stake a million that I can kiss all three without any trouble."

"That you cannot do," cried his friend, "it is "That you cannot do," cried his friend, "it is an achievement which neither you nor any other man can accomplish."

The other was positive, and invited his friend to witness his triumph. They entered the room together, and the three girls were all at home sitting beside their mother, all looking as prim and demure as John Rogers at the stake.

Our hero assumed a very grave aspect, even to dejection, and having looked wistfully at the clock, breathed a sigh as deep as Algebra, and as long as a female dialogue at a street door. His singular deportment now attracted the attention of the girls, who cast their slow opening eyes upward to his countenance. Perceiving the impression he had made, he turned to his companion and said, in a doieful voice:

"It wants three minutes of the time!"

"Do you speak of dinner?" said the old lady, laying down her sewing work.

"Dinner?" said he, with a bewildered aspect, and pointing, as if unconsciously, with curled forefinger at the clock. A silence ensued, during which the female portion of the bousehold glared at the young man with irrepressible curiosity.

"You will see me decently interred," he said, turning to his friend.

His friend was as much puzzled as any one present, and his embarrassment added to the intended effect, but the old lady being no longer able to contain herself, cried,

"Mr. C——, pray what do you speak of?"

"Nothing," snswered he, in a lugubrious tone, "but that last night a spirit appeared unto me!" Here the girls rose to their feet and drew near.

"And the spirit gave me warning that I should die exactly at twelve o'clock to-day, and you see it wants but half a minute of the time!"

The girls turned pale, their hidden sympathies were at once awakened for the doomed and departing one. They stood chained to the spot, looking alternately at the clock and at the unfortunate youth, he then walked up to the oldest of the three girls, and taking her hand, bade her a solemn farewell. He also imprinted a kiss upon her lips, which she did not attempt to resist. H
